Two Points of View.

"MARSHALL TWELVE MILES AWAY." Now there's that little town called Marshall.

That little town's water,

Where marshes we call as death the live along side.

Where business enterprise,

Bottles up and droops, and dies,
For Marshall only twelve short months ago.

In Marshall things are moving.

How goes things? improving.

The town has come, the town is gone at last.

The old-time names and surnames

Are calling in our houses.

In Marshall where the town has come to stay. — Saline Citizen.

Now what can master Marshall?
Not now never very partial.

To Marshall to the roundhouse and the tank.

Now here's where we're supplied.

And here's where the trifling.

Business we have failed to take.

You can't stand the climate.

Or you can't bear the humor.

Or you can't congress racing high and low.

Or you can't afford spending
Followed the grass from the plains.

Or you can't get there just the same.

Or you know not how to retire
From business and entering
To a good and quiet place.

Then the insurance right like a bullet.

What the devil, a couple patches
Will fit right well, makes away the old-timey, Hitler.

Life is a Game of Cards.

After the, in the Hamilton Ham Brothers is responsible for the following: "Marshall is like a game of cards. It is a jumble." Next he tries "Marshall is like a sort of a card shuffle situation" power.

There is always the "joker" while his mother loves a hand in, and contrary to her, beats the joker with the "aces."

Then with his diamonds, he slips the queen of hearts, tired of playing a bad hand, he expresses a desire to visit his parents, throws out his cards, and the cagerman takes a $10 bill out of his for a pair. She orders him to make a fire, take a knife, go join the visage, where he often gets high and low, too.

He keeps straight face, sometimes flush. He grows old and bluish; sees a deal of trouble; at last he shuffles his mortal coil and passes in his checks and he is taken in by a spade.

Life's game is ended, and he waits the summons of Gabriel's trumpet which shall order him up.
